1962 World Champions-

The 1962 World Series will always be remembered as one of the most thrilling ever played. That is usually said about every Series. But this one was different in so many ways—especially for the hero of the classic, the Yankees' Ralph Terry.

Back in 1960 against the Pirates, who downed the Yanks, four games to three on Bill Mazeroski's famed home run at Forbes Field, Terry was generally regarded as the Series' goat because he was the guy who grooved one for the Buc second sacker.

But now, Ralphie Boy is looked upon as a pitcher among pitchers, after stifling the bats of the San Francisco Giants in the seventh and deciding game of the championship set at Candlestick Park last Oct. 16, besting Jack Sanford and Billy O'Dell, 1-0, to give the Yankees their 20th world title.

The first contest of the Series, which opened in Frisco, went to the Bombers by a 6-2 count as Whitey Ford racked up his 10th Series triumph and fifth in succession. However, the Giants had the satisfaction of halting Ford's string of scoreless innings at 33-2/3.

Ford and O'Dell were locked in a 2-2 duel for six frames. Then Clete Boyer belted one over the left field fence for the decider. A pair in the eighth and one more in the ninth were mere icing on the cake.

The Giants pulled even the following day behind Jack Sanford's brilliant three-hit performance. Terry, the loser, also pitched fine ball, but suffered a tough break in the first inning.

Chuck Hiller drilled Terry's initial offering down the right field line. Roger Maris, after a long run, made what momentarily appeared to be a great running shoe-top catch. In fact umpire Hank Soar gave the out sign. But suddenly Maris dropped the ball and Hiller had himself a two-bagger. The Giants had a run when Felipe Alou sacrificed Hiller to third and Matty Alou cashed in the tally on a grounder to Bobby Richardson.

The Giants' other run came on Willie McCovey's seventh-inning roundtripper.

With the scene shifting to New York, Bill Stafford, aided by a key blow by Maris, nipped the Giants, 3-2, before 71,434. Stafford had a shutout until Ed Bailey connected for a two-run HR with two out in the ninth.

It was a scoreless encounter for six frames as Stafford and southpaw Billy Pierce matched goose eggs. As the Yanks came to bat in the seventh, they had not scored in 15 consecutive innings. But that was fixed in a hurry.

Tom Tresh began with a single, then scurried to third on Mickey Mantle's base hit. Mantle took second as Felipe Alou bobbled the ball. Maris then drilled a single to right-center, driving home Tresh and Mantle. Maris scored what proved to be the eventual game-winner on an error, long fly and a missed SF double play try.

The Giants again tied the Series up, at two games apiece, when a grand slam by Hiller enabled them to capture the fourth setto, 7-3. It was the first time a four-run HR had been made by a National Leaguer in Series play.

The blow came off reliever Marshall Bridges in the seventh inning, breaking a 2-2 deadlock. Don Larsen, third of four SF moundsmen, was the winner, while Jim Coates, who preceded Bridges to the hill, was charged with defeat. Juan Marichal and Ford had been the starters. Marichal suffered a finger injury while batting in the fifth and was sidelined for the remainder of the Series.

New York won the fifth game, 5-3, thus putting them within one of clinching the championship. It was a three-run HR by Tresh that decided matters in the eighth inning of a thrilling contest that had been tied, 2-2, until Tresh connected.

Until Tresh's blow, the Yanks' runs off Sanford had come via the gift route, one on a wild pitch, the other on a passed ball. Terry went the route for the Bombers.

After being postponed three times, the sixth game went to the Giants, 5-2. Pierce limited the Yanks to three hits as the scene shifted back to the Coast.

The contest was decided in the tourth frame when, with one out, Felipe Alou singled and Willie Mays walked. Attempting to pick off Alou, Ford heaved the ball into right-center as Alou scored and Mays reached third. Orlando Cepeda, previously in a bad slump, then doubled Mays home. Cepeda tallied the third run of the frame on Jim Davenport's hit.

Then came the finale and Terry's day in the sun. Ralph, who ended up with a four-hitter, had a perfect game going until Sanford singled with two out in the sixth. McCovey tripled, but failed to score, in the seventh.

The Yanks had tallied the lone run of the afternoon off Sanford in the fifth. Bill Skowron and Boyer singled, putting men on first and third. Terry then walked, filling the bases. Skowron tallied when Tony Kubek bounced into a double play.

The bottom of the ninth was a tingler. Matty Alou, a pinch-hitter, beat out a bunt to start the inning. But Felipe Alou and Hiller both fanned. Mays then hit an outside pitch down the rightfield line for a double. Fast fielding by Maris forced M. Alou to hold up at third.

With McCovey up, Manager Houk went out to confer with Terry. It appeared as if the left-hand hitting McCovey would be given an intentional pass to bring up the right-handed Cepeda.

But Terry pitched to McCovey, who, after hitting a long foul to right, hit a sharp liner toward right, but Richardson grabbed it and the Series was over. And Ralph Terry, the Goat of 1960 emerged as the Hero of 1962.

Mickey Mantle,

A funny thing happened to Bobby Richardson on his way to the 1962 American League Most Valuable Player Award. It was won by Mickey Mantle in a breeze.

It was thought, in many quarters, that Richardson had to be the logical choice in the voting by the Committee of Baseball Writers' Association of America. After all, didn't Mantle himself, along with Roger Maris, say time and again during the '62 campaign that the scrappy little Yankee second sacker was the league's MVP?

Didn't Richardson, appearing in every game on the Yankee schedule, bat .302, bang out 209 hits and play an outstanding game in the field?

But Mantle, despite being limited to 123 contests because of injuries, hit 30 homers, knocked in 89 runs, batted .321 and led t he junior circuit in slugging percentage.

And, in the words of Bomber boss Ralph Houk:

"I know of no one who more deserved the MVP Award than Mickey Mantle."

Of course Mighty Mick is the Yankees' Big Man. The fellow who puts the lump in the opposing pitcher's throat. The guy who beats you with one mighty stroke of his bludgeoning bat.

And you can be sure of one thing—without Mantle the Yanks would have had more trouble winning the pennant in 1962.

With Mickey in the lineup the Bombers played .625 ball. When he was sidelined for 47 games (not including pinch-hit duty) the Yanks were a mere .500 ball club.

In the actual balloting for the coveted prize, Mantle was the only player named on all 20 cards. He received 13 firsts, two seconds, three thirds and two sixths.

Richardson, the soft-spoken South Carolinian, was named first by five selectors, finishing second to Mantle in the voting. Harmon Killebrew of the Minnesota Twins was third, Leon Wagner of the Los Angeles Angels fourth and Dick Donovan of the Cleveland Indians fifth.

Three-Time Winner

It was the third time Mantle was honored with the big prize, having won it in 1956 and 1957. In '56, Mantle led the AL in homers (52), RBI (130) and batting (.353). In '57, he hammered junior loop pitching for a .365 mark. Those facts only emphasize the value of Mantle this past season when he did not approach any of the marks achieved in either '56 or '57.

Since the writers originated the MVP Awards in 1931, only five other players have captured honors thrice. They were:

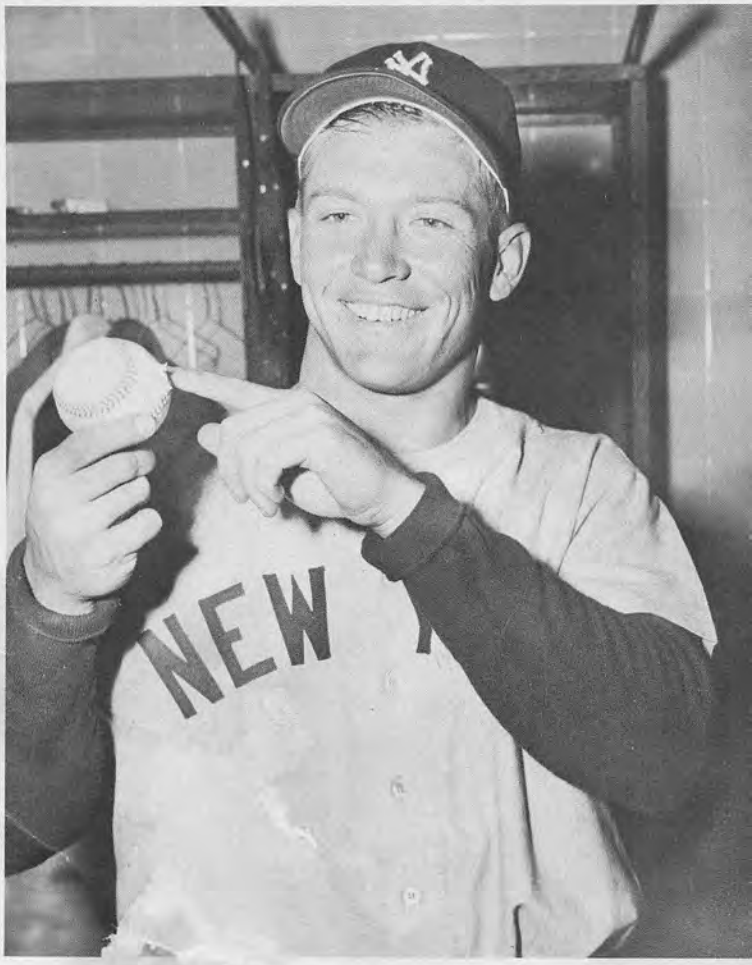
Yogi Berra, Yanks, 1951, 1954 and 1955; Jimmy Foxx, A's, 1932 and 1933 and Red Sox, 1938; Joe DiMaggio, Yanks, 1939, 1941 and 1947; Stan Musial, Cards, 1943, 1946 and 1948; and Roy Campanella, Dodgers, 1951, 1953 and 1955.

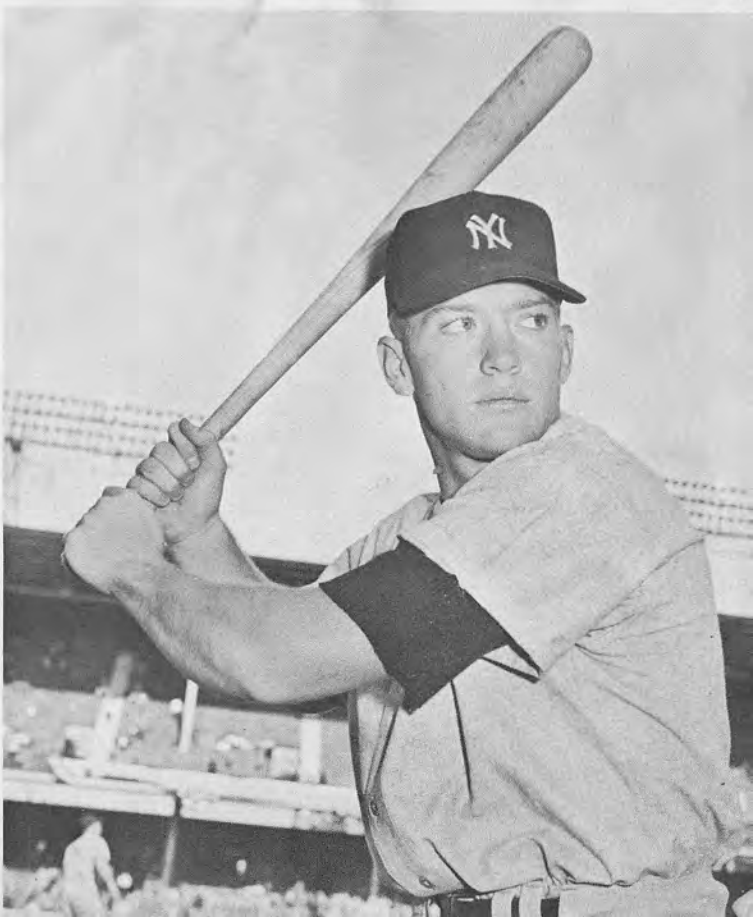
Entering the 1963 season, Mantle stood seventh in the all-time home run derby, being the only active American Leaguer in the top ten. Owning 404 roundtrippers, Mickey trailed Babe Ruth (714), Jimmy Foxx (534), Ted Williams (521), Mel Ott (511), Lou Gehrig (493), and Stan Musial (463). Breathing hot on Mantle's neck was Eddie Mathews of the Milwaukee Braves with 399 four baggers.

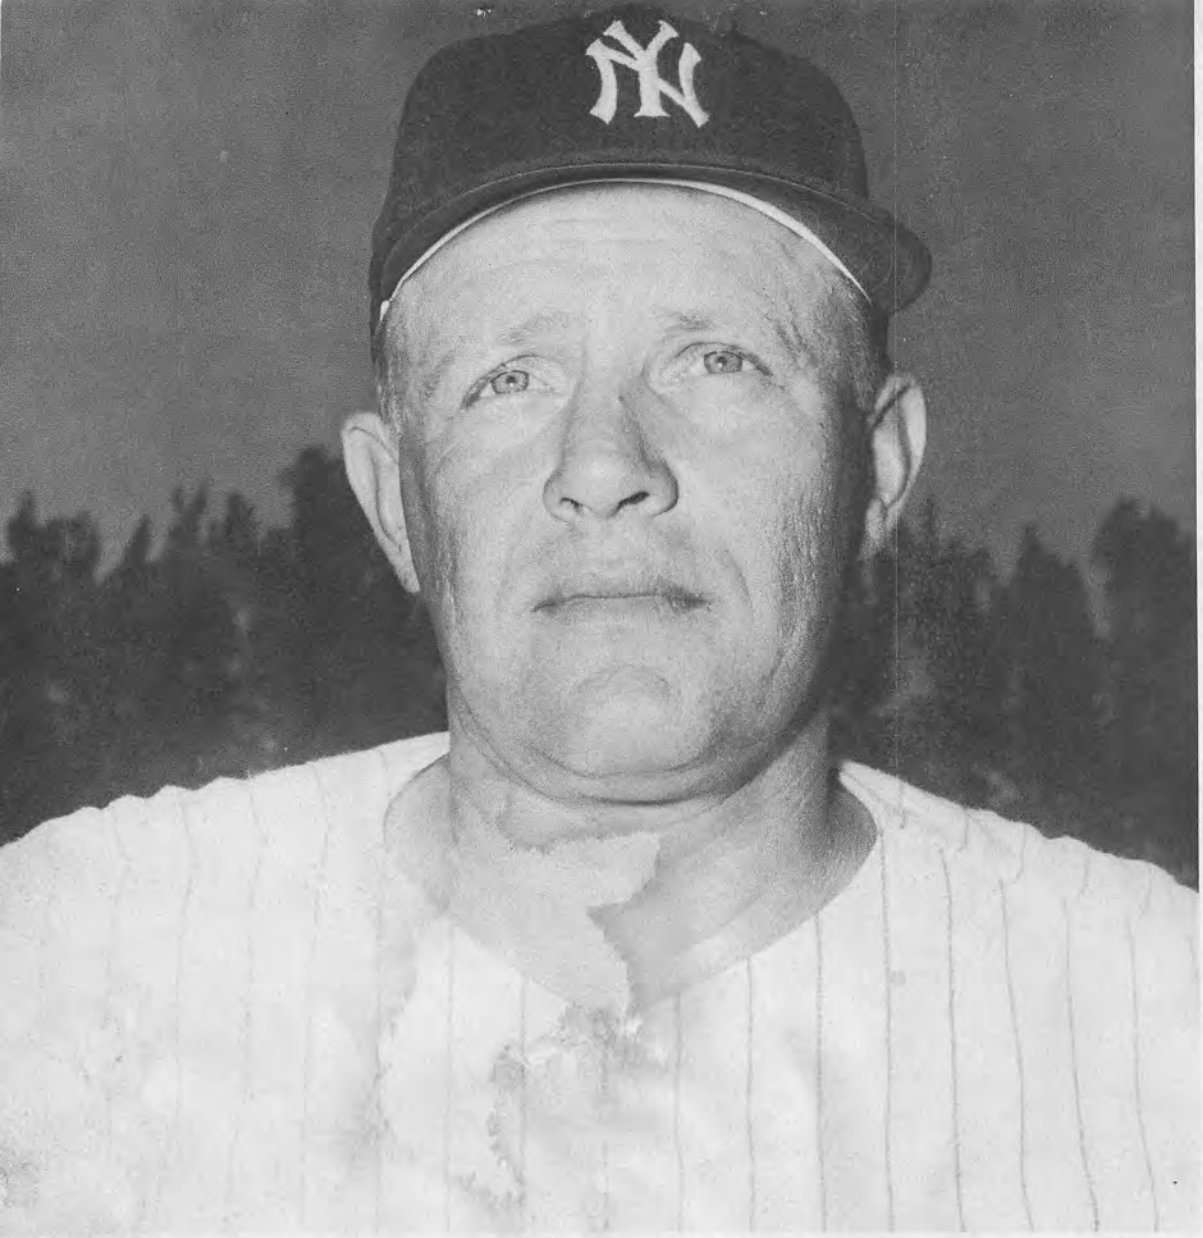
Mantle was plagued by two major injuries in '62. The first occurred the night of May 18 at the Stadium. While straining to beat out a hit with the tying run on second and two out in the ninth, Mickey tore a muscle high on the inside of his right thigh, also damaging his left knee in the process. He was sidelined for five weeks.

On Sept. 4, Mickey pulled a muscle in his side, but returned a couple of weeks later to full-time duty to lead the Yanks straight to Pennantville.

Mantle began the '62 season with hopes that it would be the best of his career. In some ways it was. If he can stay healthy and avoid injuries this season, the rest of the American League will again have to resort to the old cry of "Wait 'Til Next Year." For, as has been proven so many times, as Mantle goes, so go the Yankees.







MANAGER RALPH HOUK

Bomber boss Ralph Houk is out to tie an old record this season. Not since Hughie Jennings guided the Detroit Tigers to successive pennants in 1907-08-09, has a major league manager won flags during his first three seasons as big time pilot. Houk has two to his credit thus far. There's one big difference between Houk's and Jennings' marks though. The old Tiger manager never captured a World Series, while Ralph has yet to drop one.

Though a veteran of only 91 major league games as a catcher spread over eight active years with the Yankees, Houk has long been regarded as one of the game's best brains.

Discovered by the late Bomber scout Bill Essick, Houk began his pro career with Neosho of the Arkansas-Missouri loop in 1939. He also performed with Joplin, Binghamton and Augusta before enlisting in the army as a private. He came out of the service a major in the Rangers, receiving a battlefield commission. He was awarded, among other citations, the Silver Star for heroic action in Luxembourg in 1944.

After catching for Kansas City and Beaumont, Houk joined the Yanks in 1947, remaining with the parent club through the '54 campaign except for short tenures with the KC American Association farm in '48 and '49.

Ralph piloted Denver for three seasons, 1955-56-57, finishing second twice and third once, before returning to the Stadium as a coach under Casey Stengel in 1958.

The Bomber pilot resides in Saddle River, N. J., with his wife, Bette, and two of his three children—Dick, 19, and Bobby, 13. Donna, 21, is married.

FRANK CROSETTI

The familiar figure of Frank Crosetti will man the third base coaching box at the Stadium once again this season, the 32nd straight campaign he has worn a Bomber uniform.

Frank was one of the game's top shortstops by the time he came to New York from the San Francisco Seals in 1932. He stepped aside for Phil Rizzuto in 1941.

Crosetti, 51, is a father of two. A Yank coach since 1947, he appeared in seven World Series and one All-Star Game. Holds several major league and Series' marks.

JOHNNY SAIN

Launching his third season as pitching mentor of the Bombers is 43-year-old Johnny Sain, Yankee relief ace of 1952-53-54.

Sain, a major league hurler from 1942 through 1955 with the Boston Braves, Yanks and Kansas City A's, coached for KC briefly in 1959.

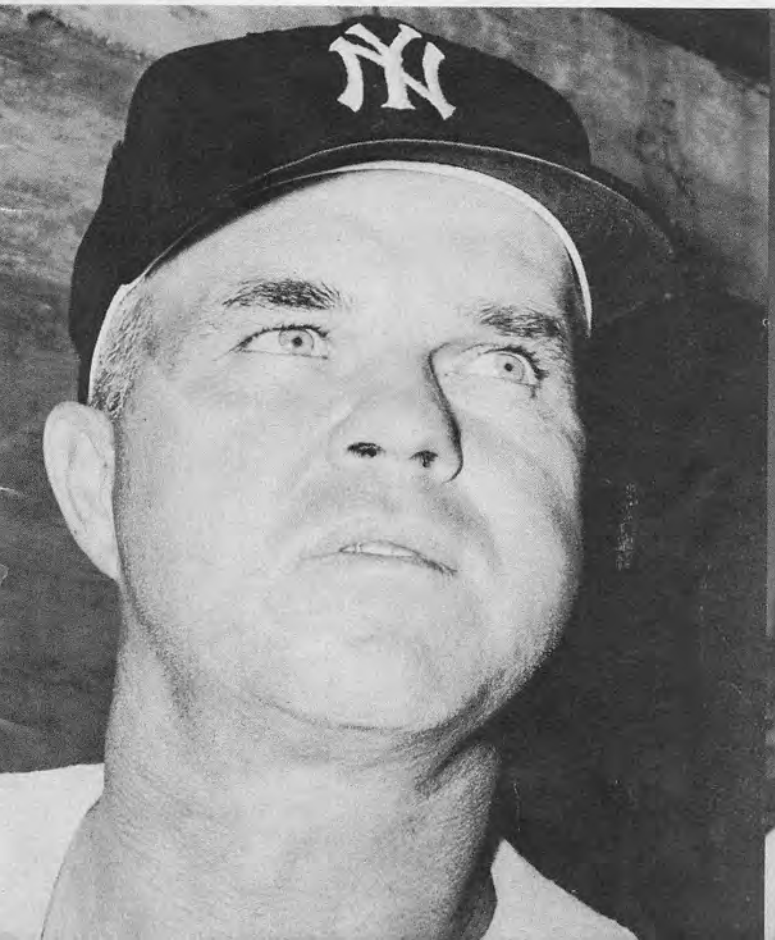
A 20-game winner four times, Sain led the NL in complete games twice, teaming with Warren Spahn in 1948 to pitch the Braves to the pennant.

Sain is married and has four children.

JIM HEGAN

Head man of the Bomber bullpen brigade is rangy Jim Hegan, a Yankee aide since July, 1960. Born Aug. 3, 1920 at Lynn, Mass., Hegan is married and has two children.

A fine defensive catcher during his playing days, Hegan caught three no-hit games for the Cleveland Indians: Don Black's triumph over Philadelphia, July 10, 1947; Bob Lemon's gem against Detroit, June 30, 1948; and Bob Feller's third no-hitter, July 1, 1951, against Detroit.



Roger Maris

OUTFIELD

Although Roger Maris dropped off greatly from his 1961 performance of 61 home runs and 142 runs batted in to 33 HR and 100 RBI in 1962, he still was an important factor in the Yankee pennant victory.

On many occasions he contributed the key hit or game-winning roundtripper that kept the Bombers going in the right direction.

True, with his .256 average and forced benching for a short period, Rog lost much prestige, as witness his not getting a single vote in the MVP poll, in which Mantle and Richardson ran one-two. Maris had won that prize two years running, in 1960 and 1961.

So you can be sure he's really out to bounce back to the top of the heap in 1963.

Rog began his major league career with the Cleveland Indians in 1957 after four sasons of minor league experience. He was swapped by the Tribe on June 15, 1958 to the Kansas City A's, along with pitcher Dick Tomanek and infielder Preston Ward, in exchange for first baseman Vic Power and shortstop Woody Held.

After a fair-to-middling 1959 campaign, the A's traded Maris to the Yanks that December, along with first sacker Kent Hadley and shortstop Joe DeMaestri for outfielders Hank Bauer and Norm Siebern, first baseman Marv Throneberry and pitcher Don Larsen.

Since he became a member of the Stadium crew, Rog has done many things and won many honors. Here are a few:

Won Hickok Belt as Top Pro Athlete of 1961; A. L. MVP 1960-61; A. L. RBI leader 1960-61; AP Pro Athlete of Year, 1961; Set A. L. mark with seven HR in six straight games in '61; led A. L. in slugging percentage 1960; Hit HR in first time at bat in World Series, Oct. 5, 1960; Named Player of the Year by The Sporting News 1961.

The 28-year-old Maris, who resides in Independence, Mo., has appeared in three World Series with the Bombers and has represented the junior loop in seven All-Star contests.

Mickey Mantle

OUTFIELD

Mickey Mantle is being paid $100,000 by the Yankees this year. If he again leads them to the American League flag he'll be cheap at the price.

A very crippled Mr. Mantle paced the Bombers to the 1962 pennant despite appearing in only 123 games. When he was in the lineup, the Bombers were at their best. Without Mickey the Yanks were, well just not quite the the same ball club. That's why he was voted the American League's Most Valuable Player Award for the third time in his spectatular career.

Compared to other seasons, 1962 wasn't one of his best statistically. He made only 121 hits, hit 30 homers and knocked in 89 runs.

But he was the clutch man when the going got rough. To wit:

On May 17, he scored the winning run in the ninth against the Boston Red Sox on a walk, stolen base, wild throw and sacrifice. The next night, against the Minnesota Twins, his leg buckled under him, tearing a thigh muscle which sidelined him for a month.

On June 16, in his first time up since the injury, he hit a three-run pinch-homer against the Cleveland Indians.

He tied a major league mark by hitting four homers in four consecutive times at bat on July 4 and 6.

On July 20, his two-run roundtripper and pair of singles downed the Washington Senators, 3-2.

On Aug. 28 his two-run HR nipped the Tribe, 2-1.

After being out a week with a strained rib muscle, he belted the 400th homer of his career on Sept. 10 to help beat the Detroit Tigers.

On Sept. 12, his three-run HR downed the Indians, 5-2.

On Sept. 18, his two boundary blasts accounted for five RBI in a 7-1 triumph over the Nats.

For the curious, the switch-hitting slugger batted .325 lefthanded (83-for-255 with 26 HR) and .311 righty (38-for-122 with four HR).

On May 6, 1962, Mickey switch-hit two homers in a contest against Washington, the ninth time he has performed that feat, which is a major league record.

Mantle also stole nine bases in nine attempts. Since he joined the Bombers in 1951, Mantle has stolen 133 bases in 163 attempts for a neat .816 percentage.

Among the highlights of Mantle's career have been:

Ralph Terry

PITCHER

Ralph Terry really came into his own in 1962. Not only did he win 23 games for the Bombers, the most victories scored by a Yankee righthander since 1928, but for his two brilliant World Series triumphs, he was awarded a Corvette by Sport Magazine as the outstanding performer of the Fall Classic.

Terry, whose ERA was 3.19, also led the A. L. in innings pitched with 299, besides topping the circuit's hurlers with his 23 wins.

In 1961, Ralph's record was 16-3 with an ERA of 3.16.

Signed to a contract by the Bomber organization in Dec. 1953, Ralph made stops at Binghamton, Denver and Birmingham before arriving at the Stadium at the end of the 1956 campaign.

Terry was traded to the Kansas City A's on June 15, 1957, with infielders Billy Martin and Woody Held and outfielder Bob Martyn in exchange for pitcher Ryne Duren and outfielders Harry Simpson and Jim Pisoni.

On May 26, 1959, Ralph was re-acquired by the Bombers, along with utility man Hector Lopez in a trade for infielder Jerry Lumpe and hurlers Johnny Kucks and Tom Sturdivant.

Since he's been back with the Yanks, Terry has improved every season. It's mighty hard to improve on 23 victories though. He (and Ralph Houk) will settle for that anytime.

SPALDING

Whitey Ford

While not quite as sharp as in 1961 when he won the Cy Young Award as the outstanding pitcher in the major leagues by virtue of his 25-4 record, Whitey Ford still was good enough to compile a 17-8 mark in 1962.

As a matter of fact, the little lefty from Lake Success even lowered his earned run average a bit, from 3.21 in '61 to 2.90 in '62.

His shoulder bothered him quite a bit during the '62 season, forcing Ford to miss a few turns, not to mention having to leave the mound during several games.

On one occasion, versus the Los Angeles Angels on May 22, Whitey had a no-hitter going, but because of a strained shoulder, left the contest in the seventh inning.

Ford nailed down the Yanks' flag-clincher on Sept. 25 by downing the Washington Senators, 8-3.

The 34-year-old blond who has compiled a 175-71 won-lost record for a percentage of .711, besides owning an ERA of 2.78 for his 11 big time campaigns, both marks tops among active major league hurlers, joined the Yankee organization on Oct. 4, 1946.

After pitching at Butler (13-4 in '47) Norfolk (16-8 in '48), Binghamton (16-5 in '49) and Kansas City (6-3 in '50), Ford was called up by the Bombers for the last half of the 1950 season to help the Yanks edge the Detroit Tigers for the flag. He captured nine of 10 decisions along with compiling a 2.81 ERA.

After seeing military service in 1951 and 1952, Whitey returned to the Bronx in 1953, where he was 18-6 in his first full major league campaign.

After a 16-8 season in 1954, Ford was 18-7 in 1955, being named the American League's top pitcher by The Sporting News.

Whitey pitched two consecutive one-hitters that season.

In 1956, when he was 19-6, Ford tied an A. L. mark by striking out six A's in succession on July 20. His won-lost percentage of .760 and ERA of 2.47 led the junior circuit.

After an 11-5 mark in 1957, Whitey was 14-7 in '58, with his 2.01 ERA pacing the loop. In 1959, a season which saw him compile a 16-10 record, Ford fanned 15 men during a 14-inning 1-0 victory over Washington on April 22.

Considered passe after a disappointing 12-9 season in 1960, Ford reached the heights in '61. On his way to 25 victories, he captured 14 straight decisions, tying him with Hall-of-Famer Jack Chesbro for the all-time Yankee record.

Ford holds the following World Series' records: Most consecutive scoreless innings—33-2/3; most starts—19; most strikeouts—82; most wins—10.

Much depends on Whitey and his aches and pains if the Yanks are to have clear sailing again this season.

Bobby Richardson

SECOND BASE

One of the hardest things for a major league player to do is to improve on the best season he's ever had. That's the problem Bobby Richardson faces this year.

In 1962, the little South Carolinian not only batted .302, but led the American League in hits with 209, set a junior loop mark for most times at bat—692—and finished second to Mickey Mantle in the A. L. Most Valuable Player poll.

It is needless to mention that he was also outstanding in the field.

Bobby, who has been a member of the Yankee organization since June, 1953, has had other top moments as a Bomber.

He hit a grand-slam homer in the World Series off Pittsburgh's Clem Labine on Oct. 8, 1960, the same contest in which he set a record by batting in six runs. He also batted in a total of 12 runs for the entire Classic for another record.

Richardson tied two other marks in the same Series by scoring eight runs and by hitting two triples in one contest.

As a result of his topnotch work, he was awarded the Sport Magazine Corvette as the outstanding performer of the '60 Series.

In the 1961 Classic, against the Cincinnati Reds, Bobby again tied a Series mark by collecting nine hits in the five-game set.

Richardson has appeared in five Series, averaging .282, and one All-Star Game.

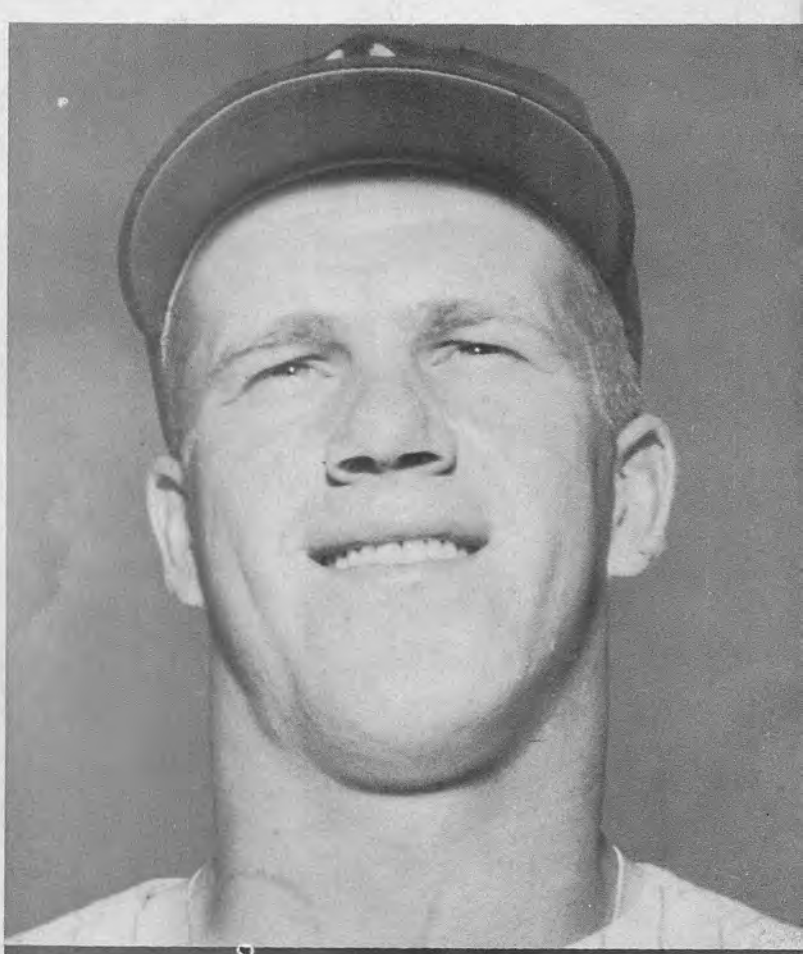
Tony Kubek

SHORTSTOP



One of the most valuable of all the Yankees is steady Tony Kubek. He proved it last year by the kind of ball he played upon his return to the club after serving nine months of Army duty.

Kubek reported to the Yanks on Aug. 4. He played his first game—in left field—on Aug. 7. On his first time at bat, he socked a three-run homer against the Minnesota Twins. Manager Houk re-installed Tony at his old shortstop position 10 days later. With Kubek back, most of Houk's worries were over. In 45 games, Kubek ended up with a .314 mark with four HR and 17 RBI.

The 26-year-old Kubek was signed by the Bomber organization in Sept. 1953, advancing through the chain with Owensboro, Quincy and Denver until his big chance came with the Yanks in 1957.

After annexing the James P. Dawson Award as the outstanding Yankee rookie in Spring training, Tony's first year performance was such that he was named American League Rookie of the Year by The Sporting News.

Against the Milwaukee Braves in the World Series that Fall, Kubek tied a record by hitting two homers in a single game.

Besides performing in five Series, Tony has represented the American League in two All-Star Games.

Cletis Boyer

THIRD BASE

Already rated a "magician" around third base due to his tremendous fielding ability, Clete Boyer is also maturing as a batsman.

The 1962 campaign was Boyer's best at the dish since he's been in the majors. During his first two full years with the Bombers—1960 and 1961—Clete's batting averages were an anemic .242 and .224, respectively. Last year, however, he zoomed to .272.

Boyer's home run production rose from 11 to 18 and his RBI from 55 to 68. Why, he even batted .318 in the World Series, connecting for his first Fall Classic round-tripper in the process.

Boyer, a member of a true baseball family, is a native of Cossville, Mo. His brother, Ken, is the star third baseman of the St. Louis Cardinals. Another brother, Cloyd, formerly hurled for the Cards and Kansas City A's, and is currently the pitching coach at Richmond. Still another brother, Ronnie, was signed to a Bomber contract in May, 1962.

Clete was signed to a big bonus contract by the A's in 1955 and sat on the bench with them for two seasons before being acquired by the Yanks in a huge deal on Feb. 19, 1957. In the trade, Boyer, along with pitchers Art Ditmar, Bobby Shantz and Jack McMahon and first baseman Wayne Belardi, came to New York in exchange for hurlers Rip Coleman, Tom Morgan and Mauric McDermott, infielders Billy Hunter and Milt Graff and outfielder Irv Noren.

Through a ruling by Commissioner Ford Frick, however, Boyer wasn't permitted to become New York property until June, having to serve out his bonus term with the A's.

Tom Tresh

OUTFIELD

Tom Tresh, the American League Rookie of the Year in 1962, is ready to make his mark in 1963 as an equal partner in a Mantle-Maris-Tresh outfield, a combination that could blend into one of the top trios of the big time.

Tresh enjoyd a fabulous first year as a Yankee. Named by Manager Houk as the team's regular shortstop after a Spring battle for the spot with Phil Linz, Tresh took over the position like an old pro. His timely hitting, sharp fielding and all-around savvy quickly earned praise from players and fans alike.

When Tony Kubek returned from military service in August, Manager Houk had himself a problem. Kubek had been the Yanks' ace shortfielder before he went away. But Tresh was too good to sit on the bench.

So Houk moved young Tom to left field, a position he was unfamiliar with. Tresh solved the problem though, as Houk felt he would, by performing in fine style as if he'd been New York's left fielder for years.

But the 24-year-old Tresh's finest hour was yet to come. It occurred in the fifth game of the World Series before 63,000 people at the Stadium. The Yanks and Giants were deadlocked at two games apiece and this pivotal contest was tied at 2-2 as Tresh faced tough Jack Sanford in the eighth inning with two Yanks on base.

Batting lefthanded, the switch-hitting rookie tied into one of Sanford's shots, lining it into the rightfield stands to clinch the victory.

Keep your eye on this son of former A. L. catcher Mike Tresh. He's going to be around for a long, long time.

Elston Howard

CATCHER

Beginning his ninth season with the Bombers and his third as the team's first-string catcher, Ellie Howard is determined to get back over the .300 batting mark.

After a fine 1961 season in which he batted .348, Howard slid to .279 last season, though he upped his RBI from 77 to 91.

Last year, Ellie also hit a pair of homers in a single game three times.

The 33-year-old Howard, who also plays the outfield and first base, joined the Yankee organization after being purchased from the Kansas City Monarchs in July, 1950.

He became the first Negro to play with the Bombers when he made the club in 1955. After batting .290 that campaign, he climaxed the season by hitting a homer in his first time up in a World Series game, connecting against the Brooklyn Dodgers on Sept. 28.

Rated one of the finest defensive catchers in the game, Ellie's rifle arm has cut down many would-be base thieves.

Besides playing in seven World Series, Howard has represented the A. L. in four All-Star contests.

Ellie was named catcher on The Sporting News American League All-Star team in 1961.

EW YOR

Yogi Berra

PLAYER-COACH

At the age of 38, Lawrence P. Berra is embarking on a new career, that of Yankee player-coach. While he probably will appear in at least as many games as he did last season (86), Yogi will attempt to impart some of the knowledge he has acquired during his long tenure as a Yankee.

Though his batting average fell to a dismal .224 in 1962, Yogi's lifetime average is still a respectable .284. Of his total of 350 major league home runs, 305 of them were hit while he performed as a catcher, the largest total made by a receiver in big league annals.

Berra was voted the American League's Most Valuable Player Award three times—in 1951, 1954 and 1955.

Yogi is tied with Gus Triandos for the most round-trippers by a junior circuit catcher in one season—30.

Among Berra's outstanding World Series accomplishments are:

First player to hit a pinch HR in the Fall Classic, that feat occurring against the Brooklyn Dodgers on Oct. 2, 1947.

Appeared in most games—74; Made most hits—71; Has most RBI—39; Has most chances, putouts and assists of any catcher in Series' history.

The famed bad-ball hitter from "The Hill" in St. Louis has also played the outfield in addition to doing most of the Bomber catching in his 17 years with the Yanks.

Yogi joined the club at the tail-end of the 1946 campaign fresh from Newark. He promptly belted a homer on his first time at bat in the big leagues.

Berra's top year, statistically, was in 1950 when he batted .322, and collected 192 hits, including 30 doubles, six triples and 28 homers, in addition to 124 RBI.

Besides those 350 HRs among his 2,105 total hits, Yogi has lashed out 315 doubles and 49 triples. He has sent 1,402 runners across the plate and has scored 1,154 runs himself.

The fact that he has struck out only 394 times in 7,399 times at bat is a tribute to his keen eye and judgment at the plate through the years.

Bill Stafford

PITCHER

For the past two seasons Bill Stafford has compiled identical 14-9 won-lost records. To break the monotony, he's going to try for 20 this year.

A member of the Bombers' staff since the latter part of the 1960 campaign, Bill is highly regarded by the club's braintrust.

He's appeared in a World Series each year since his arrival in the big time, racking up his first post-season classic triumph against the Giants last Fall by virtue of a brilliant four-hit performance.

The Athens, N. Y., native signed with the Bomber organization in June, 1957. Before receiving the call from the World Champions in '60, Stafford served his apprenticeship with St. Petersburg, Binghamton and Richmond.

His top minor seasons, victory-wise, came in 1958 with Binghamton and in '60 with Richmond, capturing 11 during those campaigns.

Stafford's ERA rose from 2.68 in 1961 to 3.68 last year. Bill aims to correct that in ample fashion this season.

Though he spent little more than half the 1962 campaign with the Yanks before being sent to Richmond, Joe tied a major league record by hitting two homers in one inning against the Kansas City A's on May 23.

While batting only .239 for the Yanks, Pepitone showed the Bomber board of strategy that he has the talent to make it big at the Bronx ballyard.

Signed by the Yanks in Aug. 1958, Joe has seen service with Auburn, Fargo-Moorhead, Binghamton and Amarillo. His best season came with the latter club in 1961 when he batted .316, with 21 homers and 87 RBI.

Stan Williams

PITCHER

Acquired from the Los Angeles Dodgers in exchange for first baseman Bill Skowron on Nov. 26, 1962, big Stan Williams is being counted on by Manager Ralph Houk as one of his regular starting pitchers.

Though one of the hardest throwers in the majors, Williams needs sharper control to reach the pinnacle of mound success.

Williams joined the Dodgers during the 1958 season after serving in the Dodger chain since 1954 with Shawnee, Newport News, Fort Worth and St. Paul.

Though he had only a 5-5 record in the Dodgers' pennant-winning year of 1959, he became one of the flag heroes when, in the final playoff game against the Milwaukee Braves, Stan hurled three scoreless innings and received credit for the 12-inning win which put the Dodgers into the World Series.

Besides appearing in the Series, Williams has pitched in one All-Star Game.

In his last three years with LA, Stan's ERA has gone up each season. If he can correct that, and use the new strike zone to full advantage, the Bombers will have once more dealt their way to success.

Another one of the Yankee all-arounders is Hector Lopez, who was born and still lives in Colon, Panama.

Since he arrived in the majors with the Kansas City A's in 1955, Hector has seen service at every position except pitcher and catcher.

Last season, playing in 106 contests, Lopez batted .275, which just happens to be his lifetime big time mark.

Hector came to New York on May 26, 1959, along with pitcher Ralph Terry for hurlers Johnny Kucks and Tom Sturdivant and infielder Jerry Lumpe.

Lopez' top slugging feat in the majors occurred on June 26, 1958, when he smote three homers for the A's against the Washington Senators.

Hector has appeared in three World Series with the Bombers. He tied a Series' mark in 1961 by batting across seven runs in the five-game set.

It's hard to say exactly where Lopez will play this season, but you can be sure Manager Ralph Houk will make good use of the 30-year-old Handy Andy.

Luis Arroyo

PITCHER

Hoping to recapture his form of 1961 when he won 15 and lost five is pudgy southpaw Luis Arroyo. That was the season the 36-year-old relief artist set an American League record for most appearances by a lefthander with 65, besides setting a junior circuit mark for most games finished by a southpaw with 54. His sterling rescue work not only resulted in greatly aiding the Yanks to a pennant, but also enabled him to receive The Sporting News "Fireman" Award as the A. L.'s premier relief pitcher.

The 1962 campaign was a different story, however. Due to miseries in his pitching elbow, Luis was limited to 34 innings of hurling, compiling disappointing 1-3 won-lost and 4.76 ERA marks.

The former National Leaguer was obtained by the Yankees on July 22, 1960, from Jersey City of the International League in exchange for hurler Zach Monroe. In 29 games with the Bombers during the last half of that season, Arroyo compiled a 5-1 record in addition to an ERA of 2.85.

Luis began his career in Organized Baseball in 1948 with the St. Louis Cardinal organization, but didn't get into a major league contest with the parent club until 1955, making stops at Greenville, Greensboro, Columbus, Rochester and Houston along the way.

His outstanding achievement up until that time was a no-hit game for Houston against Dallas on Aug. 11, 1954.

After being sent to Omaha in 1956, Arroyo was swapped to Pittsburgh in May for Max Surkont. After being shuttled to Hollywood and Columbus, Luis was dealt to Cincinnati in 1959, but was soon sent to the Reds' Havana farm. That franchise was moved to Jersey City during the '60 season, prior to his purchase by the Yanks.

One of the brightest young prospects on the Yankee mound staff judging from his rookie year performance of 1962 is 24-year-old Jim Bouton.

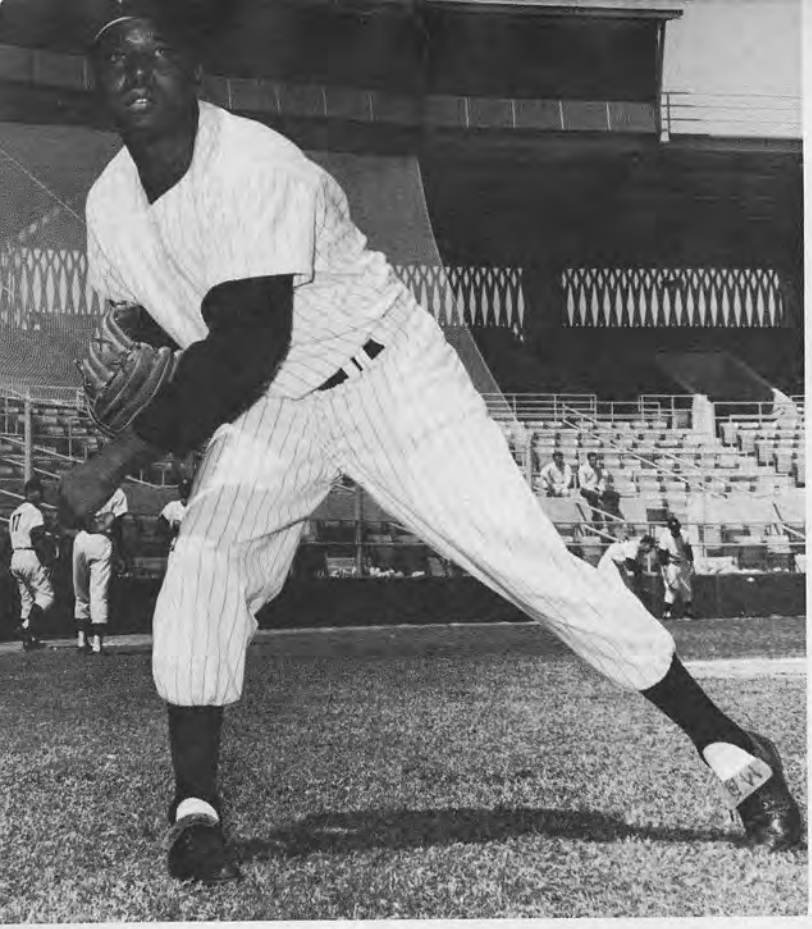
Showing unusual poise and savvy for a newcomer, Bouton finished with a 7-7 won-lost mark and a 3.99 ERA.

His outstanding performance, one that will be remembered by those who witnessed it, occurred last June 24 in Detroit. All Bouton did that afternoon was to shut out the Tigers on three hits in the last seven innings to receive credit for the victory in the longest game in major league annals—seven hours. The final score of the 22-inning marathon was 9-7.

Bouton was signed by the Yankee organization in Nov. 1958, while a student at Western Michigan U. He still attends that school during the off-season.

After compiling a 13-7 record for Amarillo in 1961, Jim was invited to train with the Yanks in '62, his name not being on the Bombers' roster, however. He made quite an impression on Manager Ralph Houk, though, being retained when the championship season opened.

Promise of things to come by Bouton was displayed when, on May 6, in his first major league start, he blanked Washington, 8-0, scattering seven hits.



Marshall Bridges

PITCHER

One of the most valuable Yankees in their successful 1962 pennant drive was lefthanded relief hurler Marshall Bridges, who led Bomber moundsmen in games saved with 11, not to mention his eight victories.

With Luis Arroyo, the relief ace of 1961, sidelined with elbow trouble, Manager Ralph Houk turned to Bridges. "The Fox" didn't disappoint him.

An accident prior to Spring training this year hampered Bridges' conditioning in his attempt to repeat his topnotch work of '62. Bridges was shot in the calf of his left leg in a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., nightclub, Feb. 12, by a woman who was arrested by police on a charge of aggravated assault. The bullet damaged a calf muscle and broke a bone, but wasn't regarded as too serious an injury by physicians.

Bridges was acquired by the Yanks on Dec. 14, 1961, from the Cincinnati Reds in exchange for catcher Jesse Gonder. "The Fox," who started his diamond career in 1953 with Sioux City, as a first baseman, first appeared in the majors with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1959. He had begun that campaign with Rochester after having starred for Sacramento in 1957 and '58.

Bridges spent the 1960 season with the Cards and Reds, finishing with a 6-2 mark and a 2.37 ERA in 57 innings. He split '61 with the Reds and Jersey City before coming to New York.

Having been an in-and-outer since being a member of the Yankee staff upon being obtained from the Kansas City A's on June 14, 1961 in exchange for pitcher Art Ditmar and infielder-outfielder Deron Johnson, Buddy Leo Daley is counting on being a steady winner in 1963.

He was considered one of the American League's better southpaws and the ace of the A's staff during the 1959 and '60 campaigns when he racked up 16-13 and 16-16 marks, respectively, for the downtrodden Westerners.

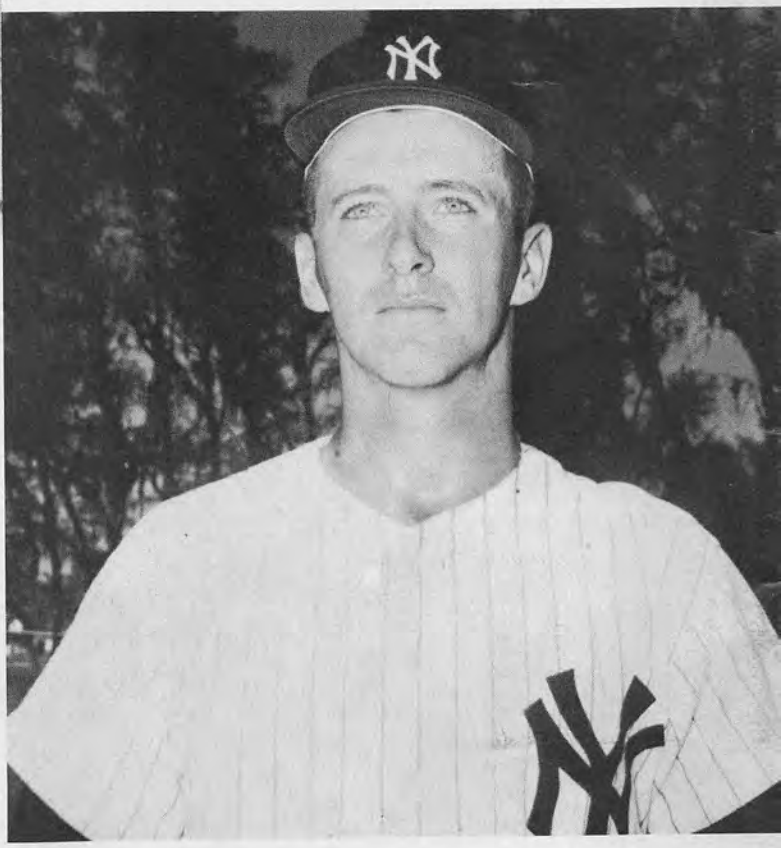
The 29-year-old native of Orange, Calif., was originally the property of the Cleveland Indians, with whom he first appeared in the majors at the tailend of 1955 after compiling an 18-16 record with Sacramento.

On April 1, 1958, the Tribe traded Daley, along with outfielders Dick Williams and Gene Woodling to the Baltimore Orioles for outfielder Larry Doby and pitcher Don Ferrarese. Seventeen days later, Bud was dealt to the A's for righthander Arnold Portocarrero.

Daley has a wide assortment of pitches in his repertoire, including a tricky knuckleball, which, he hopes, will enable him to help lead the Bombers to Pennantville.

Roland Sheldon

PITCHER



In 1961, his rookie year in the majors, Roland Sheldon rolled up 11 wins, while dropping only five. His earned run average was a neat, if not gaudy 3.59. In 1962 Sheldon's record dipped to 7-8 and his ERA to 5.49.

Needless to say, he's out to regain his form of '61 after his disappointing performance of last season.

Signed for a reported $50,000 bonus by the Bombers in June, 1960, off the U. of Connecticut campus, a school which he still attends during the off-season, Sheldon made a phenomenal jump to the varsity roster.

After compiling a 15-1 record with Auburn of the New York-Penn. loop, the 6-4, 190 lb. righthander was invited to the Yanks' spring training camp for a look-see. No one expected the Class D rookie to stick around very long.

But Manager Houk liked what he saw, being impressed with Sheldon's poise and ability. He was named winner of the James P. Dawson Award as the outstanding Yankee rookie in spring training.

When the championship race started, Sheldon was promoted to the varsity, and he's been there ever since.

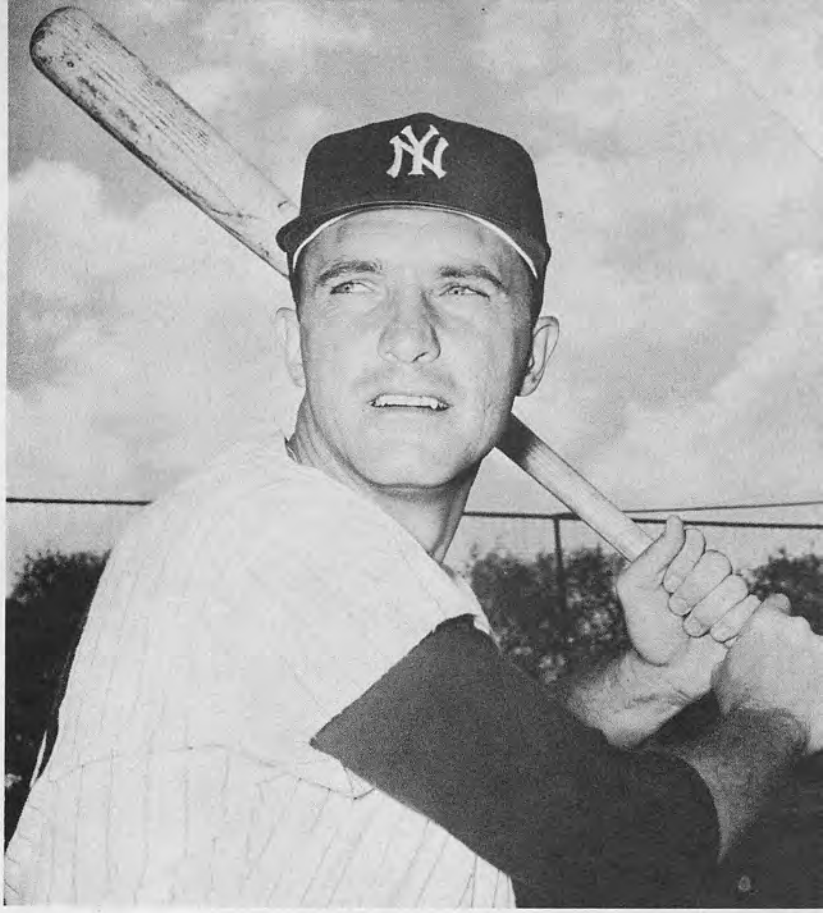
John Blanchard

CATCHER-OUTFIELDER



Following his outstanding slugging feats of 1961, Johnny Blanchard was looked upon as one of the Yankees' key men for 1962. But such was not the case.

From his '61 pace of .305, when, of his 74 hits, 21 were home runs, Blanchard slumped to .232 in '62 with only 13 HR. From 54 RBI, he fell to 39. John just was not the same clutch hitter.

The 30-year-old native of Minneapolis, Minn., began his career in the Yankee organization in July, 1951. Until 1959, he appeared in only one game with the Bombers, that coming in 1955.

During that long period, Blanchard divided his time between Kansas City, Binghamton, Amsterdam, Joplin, Denver, Birmingham and military duty.

Blanchard showed what was in store for '61 when, in the 1960 World Series against the Pittsburgh Pirates, he rapped Buc pitching for a .455 average in five contests.

Johnny tied a major league mark by clouting four home runs in four consecutive times at bat, two as a pinch-hitter, in 1961. He also tied the Series' record for most homers by one player in a five-game Series, with two roundtrippers against the Cincinnati Reds in '61.

Whether Blanchard can regain his touch of '61 will be one of the interesting things to watch for this season. In fact, the outcome of the American League pennant chase may depend on it.

Phil Linz

INFIELD

Used principally as an infield reserve in 1962, bespectacled Phil Linz nevertheless was able to bat a very respectable .287 in 71 games with the Bombers.

He was available to Manager Houk for emergency calls at second, short or third. And when asked to perform, Phil turned in a creditable job.

Linz was corralled by the Bomber organization in June, 1957. After advancing through the chain with Kearney, Auburn and Modesto, Linz led the Carolina League in hitting with a .321 mark while performing for Greensboro. In 1961 he paced all Texas League batters with an average of .349 for Amarillo.

Phil, more of a line drive hitter than a slugger-type, is rated highly as a fielder and has good speed on the basepaths.

Jack Reed

OUTFIELD

A 30-year-old native of Silver City, Miss., Jack Reed has been used mainly by Manager Ralph Houk as a late-inning defensive replacement or as a pinch-runner when the need arises.

But Jack really became a hero last season when he connected for the game-winning homer in the longest game in major league annals (22 innings and seven hours) in which the Yanks topped the Tigers at Detroit, 9-7.

Reed, who played alongside All-Pro Jimmy Patton of the grid Giants in the U. of Mississippi defensive backfield in 1952, was inked by the Yankee organization in Aug. 1953.

He enjoyed his best season in the minors with New Orleans in 1958 when he connected with Southern Association hurling for a .309 average and 19 HR, besides pacing the circuit in at bats, runs scored and hits.

Truman (Tex) Clevenger

PITCHER

Hoping to spend his first full season with the Yankees is relief hurler Tex Clevenger, who has yet to come through for the club as was expected when he was obtained from the Los Angeles Angels on May 8, 1961, along with outfielder Bob Cerv, in exchange for pitchers Ryne Duren and Johnny James and first baseman-outfielder Lee Thomas.

Clevenger began the '62 campaign with the Bombers, but was sent to Richmond where he had a 1.80 ERA in four outings. Recalled by New York, Tex captured his only two decisions, while compiling a 2.84 ERA in 38 frames.

Except for a hitch with Louisville in 1956, Clevenger was a member of the Senators through 1960, when after the Washington franchise was transferred to Minnesota, he was taken by the Angels for $75,000 in the Dec. 1960 expansion draft.

Jim Coates

PITCHER

Lanky, fast-balling Jim Coates begins his fifth season with the Bombers having compiled a 37-15 won-lost mark for a highly respectable .712 percentage during his first four major league campaigns.

Jim is used mainly as a long relief man. Though tending to be erratic at times, when he's right he's as tough to beat as anyone in the big time.

With Richmond in 1958, Coates suffered a fractured elbow in May which sidelined him for the remainder of the season.

In 1960, his sophomore season with the Yanks, Jim reeled off nine straight victories at the start of the campaign, finishing with a 13-3 mark for a league-leading .813 percentage. He's appeared in three World Series and one All-Star Game.

In '62, Coates hurled in 50 contests, winning seven while losing six. His earned run mark was 4.42.

Hal Reniff

PITCHER

A sore arm prevented Hal Reniff from doing his best work last season. But Manager Ralph Houk is hoping Hal returns to his form of 1961 when he was one of the club's bullpen mainstays over the last half of that campaign after being called up from the Richmond farm.

Hal was in the Army during the first half of the '62 season. Upon his return, he was unable to get going with the Bombers due to the condition of his arm. After only two appearances he was sent to Richmond, but was able to work only six innings there.

In the Yanks' organization since 1956, Reniff's best season was in 1959, when he was 21-7 for Modesto of the California League.

Dale Long

FIRST BASE

Handy for Manager Ralph Houk to beckon for spot duty at the initial sack or for late-inning pinch-hit calls is Dale Long, the 37-year-old veteran, now in his second stint with the Bombers.

Long, purchased on waivers by the Yanks from the San Francisco Giants on Aug. 22, 1960, was selected by the Washington Senators in the A. L. expansion draft in Dec. 1960. The Yanks didn't feel too good about losing Long, either, for in 26 games with the club, he compiled a .366 average. Seven of his 15 hits were for extra bases, three being home runs. He also had 10 RBI.

Thus, when the Nats put Long on waivers last July, the Yanks brought him back.

Long established a major league mark in May, 1956 while with the Pirates, by clouting eight homers in eight consecutive games. He tied big time marks with two straight pinch-hit roundtrippers in Aug. 1959, and by scoring three men on a single, Sept. 21, 1960.
